higher education, public-private partnership, cooperation, interaction

In the opening of the article, the author introduces the history of the issue, it turns out that public-private partnership in Russia has gone a long and fruitful way. It was widely used both in pre-revolutionary practice, in particular for the construction of a railway network, and in the first decades of Soviet power to restore the country's economy. The return to public-private partnership mechanisms occurred in the late 80s of the last century, when market relations began to form in Russia.

Further, the article discusses in detail the issues of the implementation of public-private partnership in the field of higher education. It is shown that by now it is mainly limited to project management, while the demand for public-private partnership from educational institutions is not sufficiently formed and there is no supply from economic entities.
